In 2002 the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development (ICIMOD) and The Mountain Institute (TMI) commissioned the Himal Association in Kathmandu to call filmmakers from South Asia to submit proposals for making films on culture and natural resources management in the Hindu Kush-Himalayan regions of Afghanistan, Bangladesh, China, India, Myanmar, Nepal and Pakistan. Four of forty proposals were selected on the basis of the strength of the proposals, the background of the filmmakers, and geographical diversity and commissioned with a grant from The Ford Foundation, New Delhi, India.

The outcome has been four very different portraits of four places in the Hindu Kush-Himalayan region showing the diverse ways in which culture and natural resource management are linked.

A Man Called Nomad is a story of a man trying to adjust to the shifting realities of the modern world and how he can retain within his family a sense of place as fences begin to cross the once-open plain. For generations, the plains of the Tibetan plateau provided ample grazing for his people's yak herds. Looking into the life of a 30-year-old Choegatar, father and provider, we are invited into a world where the temptations of the town intrude. Synthetic fibre is replacing wool, and a man needs capital. This is an honest portrayal of life changing, all against the backdrop of unrivalled personal and natural beauty.

The Living Plateau: Changing Lives of Herders in Qinghai

96p. ISBN: 92-9115-376-1

Price: US$ 15.00 (Developed Countries); US$ 10.00 (Developing Countries); US$ 7.50 (ICIMOD Member Countries)

The Qinghai Livestock Development project was implemented by the Qinghai Provinces Bureau of Animal Husbandry with technical assistance from the European Commission over five years, with the aim of improving the livelihood of sheep and yak herders on the Plateau. The project facilitated activities of researchers, of provincial, county, and township development officers, of herder representatives, and of teachers of a training institute. This book is the outcome of a summing up seminar held in 2000 to document and share with other projects and organisations, the findings and lessons learnt and the priorities for future action. Although the project was only able to make a modest contribution to improving the herders' situation, the information gathered will be very useful for all those interested in the real situation in this area, as a guide for future and ongoing innovations, and as an interesting source of information for those working in areas downstream that are affected by changes in the uplands.

Feeding the Herds: Improving Fodder Resources in Bhutan

Walter Roder, Kinzang Wangdi, Pema Gyamtsho and Karma Dorji 2001. 124p ISBN:92-9115-409-1

Price: US$ 20.00 (Developed Countries); US$ 15.00 (Developing Countries); US$ 10.00 (ICIMOD Member Countries)

This book provides substantial information on the grassland and fodder resources in Bhutan and their management. It is the result of a review completed in 2001 carried out by the Renewable Natural Resources Research Centre Jakar, and contains a comprehensive summary of the results of more than forty years of research into improving livestock fodder resources. Information obtained from the numerous available references was supplemented with information collected from various surveys planned and carried out as complementary activities for the review.

The book provides both a wealth of technical information and also a good insight into the legislative and farming systems framework for Bhutan's forage development programme. It is not only concerned with research, it also looks at extension activities and the impact of research and extension at the farmers' level. The constraints to fodder development are discussed, as are policy issues and future needs and directions.

ABOUT THE EDITORS

Camille Richard is currently working as a rangeland consultant for the Tibet Poverty Alleviation Fund and the Bridge Fund, both based in the US and committed to assisting pastoral communities of the Tibetan plateau. Ms. Richard was formerly the rangeland development specialist with the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development (ICIMOD) in Kathmandu, Nepal, where she was the coordinator for the Regional Rangeland Programme in five countries (Bhutan, China, India, Nepal, and Pakistan). In this capacity she provided research and policy advisory services and participated in networks at national, regional and global forums, including organisation of this meeting. Ms. Richard also worked for many years in mined land reclamation and wetland restoration, and is on the Advisory Board of the Snow Leopard Conservancy.

Kate Hoffman received her Bachelor of Science in range/livestock management from the University of Idaho, USA, in 2001, and worked as a research assistant in ICIMOD's Regional Rangeland Programme from 2002 to 2003. She is currently doing a masters degree in rangeland ecosystem science at Colorado State University, USA, focusing on the social aspects of collaboration in natural resource management. Kate has also worked in Idaho and Wyoming for the Broken Circle Cattle Company, the United States Forest Service, The Nature Conservancy, and the University of Idaho's College of Natural Resources.
